Recently retired best friends find a historic hotel in Marietta, Ohio, and learn it was once a stop for the Underground Railroad. They immediately began plans to renovate the old stone building and open it as a B&B and soup café. But someone doesn't want that to happen. Baffling things keep occurring at the Inn. Who or what is trying to scare them away? In their quest for answers the women stumble upon an old journal by a former slave who made a trip across the river to pick up human "parcels" and offer them refuge. What can this person's insights on faith, bits of humor and tireless wisdom from the 1800's teach the new owner of the Inn? Can her writings shed light on the present-day mysteries at the Inn?
